Man Convicted For Quadruple Murders Sentenced to Death

A man convicted of gunning down four people outside a Northridge boarding house more than two years ago was sentenced today to death, the Los Angeles County District Attorney's Office announced.

Ka Pasaouk, 34, was convicted last year of four counts of first-degree murder for the Dec. 2, 2012, fatal shootings of Teofilo Navales, 49, Robert Calabria, 34, Amanda Ghossein, 24, and Jennifer Kim, 26.

Pasaouk also was convicted of one count of attempted murder, five counts of assault with a semiautomatic firearm and possession of a firearm by a felon. Jurors found true the special circumstance of multiple murders in case PA075729.

Deputy District Attorney Dan Akemon told jurors earlier that Pasaouk began the killing spree outside the home in the 17400 block of Devonshire Street as a robbery and then he continued the fatal assaults to silence witnesses.

The case was investigated by the Los Angeles Police Department's Robbery-Homicide Division.
