Man Convicted of Murdering USC Grad Student

A man was convicted today for his role in the 2014 murder of a University of Southern California graduate student, the Los Angeles County District Attorney's Office announced.

Jurors deliberated for less than a day before finding Alberto Ochoa (1/23/97) guilty of one count each of first-degree murder, assault with a deadly weapon, second-degree robbery and attempted second-degree robbery.

Sentencing is set for March 8 when Ochoa faces life in prison without the possibility of parole.

Deputy District Attorney John McKinney of the Major Crimes Division prosecuted the case.

Ochoa and three others confronted 24-year-old Xinran Ji, who was walking home from a study group near the USC campus shortly before 1 a.m. on July 24, 2014. Ochoa struck the victim with a bat before he ran away.

Co-defendant Andrew Garcia (dob 12/19/95) eventually caught up to Ji and hit him repeatedly with the bat. Ji made his way back to his apartment where he died. He was found hours later by a roommate.

In August 2017, Garcia was sentenced to life in prison without the possibility of parole after jurors found him guilty of one count each of first-degree murder, robbery, attempted robbery and assault with a deadly weapon. The special circumstance allegation of murder during an attempted robbery was found to be true.

Jonathan Del Carmen (dob 6/2/95) pleaded guilty last year to one count of second-degree murder. Alejandra Guerrero (dob 6/2/98) was convicted in October 2016 of one count each of first-degree murder, robbery, attempted robbery and assault with a deadly weapon.

Del Carmen was sentenced to 15 years to life in state prison, while Guerrero was sentenced to life in prison without the possibility of parole.

Ochoa, Garcia and Guerrero were each convicted for robbing a man and a woman near Dockweiler Beach, the prosecutor said.

Case BA427590 was investigated by the Los Angeles Police Department.
