Erica Robinson cultivates community solutions and champions social causes impacting vulnerable populations including public health and safety, hunger, and homelessness. Robinson holds a bachelor's degree in Computer Information Systems, and is a technologist with nearly a decade of engineering experience. During the pandemic, she pivoted to foster engagement and collaboration amongst businesses, community-based organizations, local health organizations, qualified health professionals, and community leaders to support communities that are disproportionately impacted by COVID-19.

Robinson is a member of the National Association of Health Services Executives (NAHSE) and President of Health Matters Clinic (HMC), a nonprofit organization designed to reduce barriers to optimum health by connecting health systems, businesses, and communities. Sponsored by LA CARE Health Plan, HMC, has been immersed in providing pandemic support including food distribution, health screenings, testing, and vaccinations to help serve Los Angeles' most vulnerable residents. HMC's leadership was recognized for their extraordinary efforts by the Los Angeles Business Journal at the 2021 Health Care Leadership Awards.

Previously, Robinson served as Vice President, Digital Support Engineer for City National Bank. To bridge the digital divide and drive equity in marginalized communities she developed a customized STEM program for youth in South Los Angeles. To further advocate for health equity, diversity, and inclusion, she aims to expand investments in digital literacy, and redefine recruitment and retention strategies in healthcare and technology.
